

Public Trust and Misinformation Exposure in Online Communities

Abstract. This study examines misinformation exposure, public trust, and civic participation in online communities. We combine survey evidence with network features to identify conditions under which misinformation changes institutional trust and health information behavior.

1. Introduction

Digital platforms shape public reasoning and social coordination.